

A map of the contiguous United States with state boundaries outlined in black. Forty-eight green dots are placed on the map, representing sampling sites. The dots are distributed across all 48 states, with a higher density in the eastern half of the country. Each state contains at least one dot, and most states contain two or more. The dots are not clustered in any single region, providing a broad national coverage.

